Wall Street Stocks Fall; Doom Rises

New York

Stocks and interest rates fell sharply Wednesday as more bad news chipped away at investors' view of the economy.

The Dow Jones industrial average fell 265 points, and all the major indexes fell more than 2 percent. The Dow has now fallen four days out of five, and it has lost almost 320 points in just the past two days. Meanwhile, the yield on the Treasury's 10-year note fell to its lowest level since March 2009 as investors avoided stocks and sought the safety of government securities.

Only 442 stocks rose on the New York Stock Exchange, while 2,627 fell, a sign that investors expect all businesses to suffer if the economy continues to weaken.

Investors' gloom deepened a day after the Federal Reserve said it would begin buying government bonds as a way to stimulate the economy.

The Commerce Department said the trade deficit widened in June to its highest level in 20 months as exports dipped. Falling exports mean U.S. manufacturing could be slowing down. STEPHEN BERNARD (AP)

GOP Risks It With Tea Partiers

Dems seek leverage against inexperienced Republican recruits

Washington

Hard-pressed for good news this election season, President Obama's Democrats claim to see a silver lining in the Republicans' choice of political novices, sometimes mistake-prone, for critical Senate races.

Snubbing the GOP establishment's recruits, Republicans this week chose Ken Buck in Colorado, a county prosecutor who insulted his tea party backers and spoke about eliminating the Education Department, and Linda McMahon in Connecticut, a former World Wrestling Entertainment executive shown on video kicking her performers in the crotch.

Those two join tea party-preferred candidates Rand Paul in Kentucky and Sharron Angle in Nevada, campaigners who have struggled with embarrassing missteps and cable-ready gaffes.

"Whatever folks say about the general atmospherics, the tea party takeover of the Republican Party is really producing real millstones for them," Democratic Party Chairman Tim Kaine said in an interview Wednesday.

CHARLES KRUPA/AP

Anyway, that's what the Democrats hope. They argue their experienced candidates have the upper hand in general election matchups with these untested folks.

Sen. John Cornyn, the head of the GOP Senate campaign committee, doesn't buy it.

"That's wishful thinking on their part," he said in an interview. "This election's going to be about jobs, spending and debt." And on those measures, Cornyn said, Democrats will lose because it's Obama's policies that are "outside of the mainstream and extreme." He accused Democrats of trying to change the subject by tearing down GOP candidates who were nominated. "Every single one of them is on the side of the American people," Cornyn added.

This is no ordinary year.

An anti-establishment fervor has swept the country. Voters are down on lawmakers of all political stripes. In a June Associated Press-GfK poll, only a little over a third said they'd like to re-elect their own congressman, while more than half said they want someone else. Just a quarter of the public approved of the Democrat-controlled Congress. Other surveys show support in the teens. LIZ SIDOTI (AP)

"[They have] ideas about the role of government that are way outside of the mainstream, that are just going to be offensive to people."

Jurors in the corruption trial of ex-Illinois governor Rod Blagojevich sent a note to the judge suggesting they may be deadlocked on some counts. The note read in court on Wednesday says the jury is asking for guidance if it can't reach a unanimous decision and that it made "a reasonable attempt." The judge says he'll send back a note asking the jury to clarify which counts it is undecided on. Jurors are in their eleventh day of trying to reach a verdict. (AP)

Longtime Ill. Rep. Rostenkowski Dies

Chicago Democrat's legacy marred by his time in federal prison

Chicago

Former representative Dan Rostenkowski, the Chicago Democrat who became the leading architect of congressional tax policy in the Reagan era but later went to federal prison for corruption, died Wednesday, a family friend said. He was 82.

Rostenkowski, who served 18 terms before losing in 1994, died surrounded by family at his home in Lake Benedict, Wis., friend Ellen Tully told The Associated Press. He had been treated for prostate cancer in the 1990s.

As House Ways and Means Committee chairman, Rostenkowski was known as a consensus builder and a master of legislative tactics. He is credited with leading a 1983 effort to rescue Social Security from insolvency and pushing through a sweeping 1986 overhaul of the nation's tax system.

Rostenkowski

But Rostenkowski himself acknowledged that his legacy would always be tainted by his stint in federal prison. "I know that my obituary will say, 'Dan Rostenkowski, felon,' and it is something that I have to live with,'" he said in a 1998 broadcast interview with Robert Novak and Mark Shields.

In 2000, however, then-President Bill Clinton pardoned Rostenkowski. DON BABWIN (AP)

FBI: 'Granddad Bandit' Caught

Baton Rouge, La.

A man dubbed the "Granddad Bandit" and suspected of robbing at least 25 banks in 13 states was captured Wednesday after a standoff at a home in Baton Rouge that ended peacefully, authorities said.

Police and FBI agents surrounded the home Wednesday and around 3:45 p.m. walked out with a stocky, balding man with graying hair and glasses. FBI Special Agent Howard Schwartz identified the man as 53-year-old Michael Mara. He had previously been unidentified.

Schwartz says Mara was arrested on a warrant for a bank robbery in Richmond, Va., but he is also suspected in the other robberies. (AP)

Fires Could Stir Chernobyl Dust

Flames might send radioactive particles into the air in Russia

Moscow

Wildfires threatened to stir radioactive particles left over from the 1986 Chernobyl nuclear disaster back into the air over western Russia, and authorities boosted forest patrols to keep the flames from contaminated areas.

Environmentalists and forest experts warned that the radioactive dust could be harmful, even though doses would likely be small.

"The danger is still there," said Vladimir Chuprov of Russian Greenpeace.

Russian volunteers ride on a trailer as they prepare to put out a fire Wednesday.

The Emergency Situations Ministry said at least six wildfires were spotted and extinguished this week in the Bryansk region — the part of Russia that suffered the most when the Chernobyl nuclear power plant's reactor No. 4 exploded during a pre-dawn test on April 26, 1986, spewing radioactive clouds over much of the western Soviet Union and northern Europe.

Radiation experts from Moscow determined there has been no increase in radiation levels in the Bryansk area, on the border of Belarus and Ukraine, ministry spokeswoman Irina Yegorushkina said Wednesday.

The forest floor holds radioactive particles that settled after the Chernobyl disaster, which environmentalists warned could be thrown into the air by the fires.

"A cloud may come up in the air with soot and spread over a huge territory," said Alexander Isayev of the Moscow-based Center for Forest Ecology and Productivity.

Risking Exposure

The most dangerous radioactive elements left by the Chernobyl accident are cesium and strontium, which, with repeated exposure, could raise the risk of cancers and genetic disorders, environmentalists said. "There is a higher threat of cancers and future mutations, especially for children, embryos, if a woman is pregnant," said environmental researcher Anton Korsakov. (AP)

Zimbabwe Sells Uncut Diamonds

Harare, Zimbabwe

Zimbabwe began selling hundreds of thousands of carats of rough diamonds Wednesday that were mined from an area where human rights groups say soldiers killed 200 people, raped women and forced children into hard labor.

Abbey Chikane, Zimbabwe monitor of the world diamond control body, certified the diamonds as ready for sale on Wednesday, having said controversy-plagued diamonds from two mines in eastern Zimbabwe met minimum international standards. About 900,000 carats were put up for auction Wednesday, the mines ministry said.

Investigators for the world's diamond control body said last year that the gems were mined at the Marange diamond fields by virtual slaves. Yet the Kimberley Process, the diamond body, said those gems didn't qualify as "blood diamonds."

Superbug Could Signal Wave of Drug Resistance

London

People traveling to India for medical procedures have brought back to Britain a new gene that allows any bacteria to become a superbug, and scientists are warning this type of drug resistance could soon appear worldwide.

Though already widespread in India, the new superbug gene has been spotted in Britain and elsewhere. Experts warn the booming medical tourism industries in India and Pakistan could fuel a surge in antibiotic resistance.

The superbug gene, which can be swapped between different bacteria to make them resistant to most drugs, has so far been identified in 37 people who returned to the U.K. after undergoing surgery in India or Pakistan.

The resistant gene has also been detected in Australia, Canada, the U.S., the Netherlands and Sweden. In an article published online Wednesday in the journal Lancet Infectious Diseases, doctors reported finding a new gene, called NDM-1.

The gene alters bacteria, like E. coli, making them resistant to nearly all known antibiotics. (AP)

Fenty Spends Big in D.C.

Mayor shells out $2M to keep Gray at bay in primary contest

Washington

Mayor Adrian M. Fenty, finding himself in a contentious race with Council Chairman Vincent C. Gray, spent more than $1.8 million — mostly in television advertising — in June and July.

The rapid spending after months of sitting on millions of dollars leaves Fenty with $1.9 million in cash on hand as the Sept. 14 Democratic primary approaches.

But the mayor's ability to raise money has also slowed tremendously — he has already tapped local government workers, contractors and developers for the maximum $2,000 contributions.

Since June 11, Fenty has raised just $308,454, compared to $707,911 raised by his main challenger, Gray, during the same period, according to campaign finance reports filed just before midnight Tuesday.

Gray spent $585,701 in the same period and now has $689,808 in cash on hand. Overall, Fenty continues to crush Gray in his overall total raised: $4.7 million to $1.3 million. NIKITA STEWART (THE WASHINGTON POST)

Rhee Welcomes New Teachers

Washington

Day one for the District's 400 or so newest public school teachers began in a not-quite-air-conditioned auditorium Wednesday with a welcoming gift from Chancellor Michelle A. Rhee: her pity.

"I know what you are about to go through, and I feel really, really bad for you," said Rhee, somewhat tongue in cheek. Her audience was dominated by faces so improbably young they looked as if they should be out buying binders and calculators.

Rhee also struck other more inspirational themes as she kicked off a three-day orientation at Columbia Heights Education Center for the corps of new teachers preparing for school to open on Aug. 23. She said, as she often does, that there is no more important work than what they've chosen, and that their success will depend on their ability to listen to students.

"If you do your jobs well, I guarantee you the children will exceed your expectations," she said. BILL TURQUE (THE WASHINGTON POST)

Not-So-Secret Weapon

With control of Congress in play, Democrats deploy the popular first lady

Washington

The White House's efforts to hold on to a majority in Congress have expanded from the West Wing to the East Wing, where political operatives are calling on Michelle Obama to campaign for endangered Democrats.

Unlike her husband, the first lady has maintained her appeal to women, independents, and the new and young voters who helped propel her family into the White House. She has won praise for the issues she has chosen to champion, such as curbing childhood obesity. She has become something of a cultural and fashion icon, drawing a different kind of attention to the White House. And with an approval rating of 66 percent, she is easily the administration's most popular figure.

Yet sending the first lady onto the trail is not a risk-free strategy. Obama seems to have little margin for error, as her every move is scrutinized by fans and, especially, foes. Her recent vacation to Spain, for instance, was criticized by many on the left and the right for being overly extravagant at a time of dire need for many Americans.

That level of attention will only increase in the run-up to the November elections, raising Democrats' fears that she could say or do something that critics will seize on and that will overtake the party's message. During her husband's run for president, Obama was harshly criticized for her remark that "for the first time in my adult lifetime, I'm proud of my country."

A return to campaigning will also be a test of Obama's popularity, as she puts her considerable and carefully crafted personal capital on the line. If she's seen as overly partisan, she could dampen support for her platform and perhaps erode the goodwill she'll need to boost her husband in 2012.

Nevertheless, senior White House aides have concluded that they have little choice but to deploy the first lady and have begun to discuss having her campaign in close races. "Michelle Obama is the most popular figure out there right now, with a great profile as a strong woman who cares about her family, children and the country," said Celinda Lake, a Democratic pollster and strategist.

NIA-MALIKA HENDERSON (THE WASHINGTON POST)

Back in the Spotlight

In the nearly two years since Barack Obama was elected president, Michelle Obama has avoided partisan politics, undergoing a makeover that has transformed her into a pop-culture icon. Occasionally, she tiptoes into policy debates over such issues as health care, but mainly she sticks to her issues, including mentoring young women, advocating for military families and curbing childhood obesity. East Wing aides said Michelle Obama very much wants to stay in her comfort zone on the trail, which means she will probably tout her own initiatives and those of the administration. A test run for this approach came in May, when Obama headlined a Democratic National Committee event and talked about the administration's achievements on the economy, health care and education. (TWP)

Following Laura Bush

The White House is hoping that Michelle can do for Barack what Laura did for George and the GOP four years ago. In that midterm election, Laura Bush attended more than 70 events at a time when her approval rating was about twice as high as her husband's dismal 40 percent. "She was relentless and was out on the trail," said Anita McBride, Laura Bush's former chief of staff. Rep. Joe Sestak, D-Pa., said the White House has been "very receptive" to his request to have the first lady campaign with him. Aides initially offered the president, but Sestak said the first lady was his first choice. (TWP)

Where She's Needed

Sen. Barbara Boxer, D-Calif., has already asked the first lady to appear with her on the trail. So has Rep. Joe Sestak, D-Pa., who is running for the Senate.

In a July White House meeting, House Speaker Nancy Pelosi, D-Calif., requested Michelle Obama's help with fundraising. Aides estimated that the first lady could bring in as much as $20 million.

Rep. Gerald E. Connolly, D-Va., represents a district with a large minority population and plans to ask the first lady to campaign for him.

Rep. Mary Jo Kilroy, D-Ohio, who is up for reelection this November, has also invited the first lady to her district.

Will Strasburg Strike Back?

Nats phenom must overcome adversity for first time as pro

— STEPHEN STRASBURG, DESCRIBING HIS STRUGGLES AGAINST THE FLORIDA MARLINS TUESDAY NIGHT. IT WAS, BY FAR, THE WORST OUTING HE'S HAD IN THE MAJORS.

After the worst outing of Stephen Strasburg's major league career, Nationals pitching coach Steve McCatty was asked how he expects the rookie sensation to respond to a taste of trouble. "Well," McCatty replied, "I haven't really seen him have too much adversity so far."

It's true. No one has. Not at this level, anyway. Through his first nine starts for the Nationals, Strasburg was 5-2 with a 2.32 ERA, 75 strikeouts and 15 walks. He never lasted less than five innings and never allowed more than three earned runs — only the second player in major league history to begin a career with those numbers, according to the Elias Sports Bureau.

Strasburg also never struck out fewer than five batters in any of those appearances, including a high of 14 in his dazzling debut June 8, a performance captured on a DVD the Nationals will hand out at Thursday's home game.

"We've raised the bar very high for Stephen," manager Jim Riggleman said, "and maybe unfairly."

Now have come a couple of glitches. Strasburg was scratched from a start July 27, when he had trouble getting loose. Two days later, he went on the disabled list.

And in Strasburg's return Tuesday night against the Florida Marlins? He went a career-low 4 1/3 innings, gave up a career-high six earned runs and struck out four hitters in an 8-2 loss to the Marlins. His three-start winning streak ended. His ERA rose to 3.07.

"He was out there kind of feeling for it a little bit," said Florida's Dan Uggla. "His command wasn't as good as the first time we faced him."

That's right: The Marlins were the first big league club to take a second trip into the Stras-tophere, and they thought that made a difference. The other time the top pick in the 2009 draft pitched against Florida, he struck out seven in six shutout innings.

So, what happens now? Strasburg is scheduled to return to the mound Sunday at home against the Arizona Diamondbacks.

"He knows — he's a smart kid — that he's going to have a couple of bad starts," Nats third baseman Ryan Zimmerman said. "The important thing was, he came back, his arm looked great, and he's going to be here for a long time. So, that's what we're more worried about this year." HOWARD FENDRICH (AP)

Don't Make Him Angry

In a start last month against San Francisco, Stephen Strasburg gave up a homer to Andres Torres, left, leading off the game. In Torres' next at-bat, Strasburg struck him out to end an inning, then hopped off the mound, muttering something. Against Florida, after giving up a two-run homer to Uggla on a 99 mph fastball that was supposed to stay away but went up and in, Strasburg greeted the next batter, Cody Ross, with a 100 mph swinging strike. So, perhaps Strasburg similarly will be focused on making the Diamondbacks pay Sunday for what the Marlins did on Tuesday. (AP)

Zorn Moves on Up I-95

Ex-Redskins coach has longer commute as Ravens assistant

Pro Football

The drive to work is quite a bit lengthier, which could test the depth of his books-on-tape collection. The job to which he's driving isn't as prestigious. Jim Zorn acknowledged here this week that the latest abrupt twist in his career path isn't ideal, not after spending the last two seasons as the head coach of the Washington Redskins.

But after spending more than two hours on a steamy morning instructing a new group of football-throwing pupils that includes Joe Flacco and Marc Bulger, Zorn said he's enjoying life as the first-year quarterbacks coach of the Baltimore Ravens and is pleased to be back at work in the NFL.

"I feel very fortunate to be working and coaching," said Zorn, who drives two hours to work from the same Northern Virginia home he lived in while he was with the Redskins. "I love it. I can't say that not being the head football coach is OK. But it's where I'm at today. I'm having a great time."

As landing spots go, Zorn found a good one after being fired by the Redskins after a 4-12 season. The Ravens appear to be a solid Super Bowl contender after trading for a top wide receiver, Anquan Boldin, in the offseason to aid the development of Flacco, their third-year quarterback.

ROB CARR/AP

"Would there have been changes in my year three? Absolutely, there had to be, right?"

— JIM ZORN, WHO WASN'T GIVEN A CHANCE TO MAKE HIS DESIRED CHANGES WITH THE REDSKINS THIS YEAR.

The Ravens open their preseason Thursday night at M&T Bank Stadium against the Carolina Panthers, with Flacco and the other starters scheduled to play a quarter or less.

If Flacco and the Ravens find success, opportunities could abound for everyone involved. Zorn said he wants to be a head coach again, but he also said he's currently focused on helping Flacco, head coach John Harbaugh and offensive coordinator Cam Cameron. Zorn declined to characterize his feelings about his experience with the Redskins.

"It could be about me whining, and I'm not much of a whiner," Zorn said. "I try not to be, anyway. What I'm trying to do is learn from all the things that were good, learn from maybe some of the negative things, and then push forward and try to be better as I go along."

Jets' Ryan Aims to Bring in Revis

Pro Football

Rex Ryan's next starring role: the Negotiator.

The brash New York Jets coach has come up with a game plan to get holdout cornerback Darrelle Revis back on the field. And, everyone in the organization is invited.

"We'll call off practice," Ryan said Wednesday. "We'll have our whole team there and meet. That way there's no 'he said, she said' or whatever. Just get the thing done, and let's work it out that way."

Don't laugh. Despite HBO and NFL Films taping the Jets throughout training camp for their "Hard Knocks" series, Ryan wasn't just playing it up for the cameras.

"Absolutely serious," he said — with no smile. (AP)

Prognosis Good for Mickelson at the PGA

Lefty says arthritis is under control as he becomes a vegetarian

Golf

Forget chasing the No. 1 ranking. Phil Mickelson was more worried about being able to get out of bed.

Mickelson revealed ahead of this week's PGA Championship he has psoriatic arthritis, which causes his immune system to attack his joints and tendons and produced such intense pain he couldn't walk. He noticed the first symptoms five days before the U.S. Open, and the pain eventually got so bad he made a visit to the Mayo Clinic.

Phil Mickelson couldn't walk for a time because of the pain he felt from arthritis.

Weekly shots have brought the disease under control, and Mickelson said there shouldn't be any negative impact on his long- or even short-term health.

"I'm surprised at how quickly it's gone away, and how quickly it's been able to be managed and controlled," he said. "I feel 100 percent, like I say. But when I'm laying there on the couch and I can't move, you know, yeah, I had some concerns. But I feel a lot better now."

As if that bombshell wasn't enough Tuesday, Lefty dropped another one: the burger connoisseur is now a vegetarian.

"I know, I know," he said as reporters laughed. "As long as I believe that there's a possibility that it will help me overall, yeah, I'll continue to do that. If it will somehow keep this in remission or stop it from coming back, yeah, I'll be able to do it. But I haven't been put it to the real test. The real test is driving by a Five Guys and not stopping." NANCY ARMOUR (AP)

on the spot

YOU KNOW what's not funny? When you're a comedian and someone steals your jokes. So, when Patton Oswalt heard that the 2010 valedictorian of Columbia University's School of General Studies had pinched one of his jokes for a speech, it was no laughing matter.

The stand-up veteran, who makes regular appearances on Showtime's "United States of Tara" as well as lending his voice to TBS' "Neighbors From Hell," got an apology from the grad, and now Oswalt is on the road and working on new material for an album set to drop next year.

Oswalt spoke to Express about his voice-acting career, his year-old daughter and the ever-vigilant eye of the Internet.

How did you start to get into voice acting?

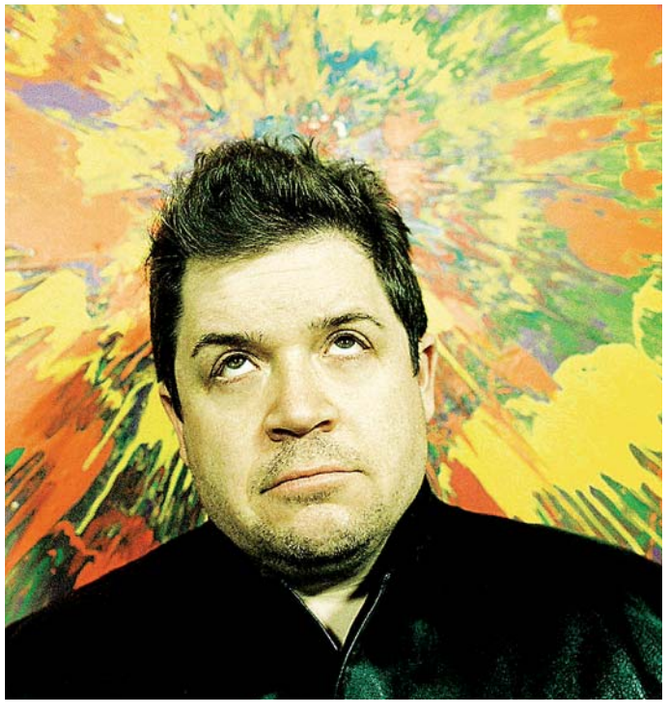
I can't really remember how that happened. I think someone saw me doing stand-up and brought me in to do some voices, and it grew from there.

How do you prepare for your different voice-acting roles? Do you try out a bunch of different voices?

It's always cold reading, so there's no preparation. You just go in and they kind of flap the script down and you read it.

Your daughter was born last year in April. How's fatherhood?

Sleep-deprived, but fun. I can't complain. I like being a dad; it ended up working out really well.



COURTESY PATTON OSWALT

Patton Oswalt

COMEDIAN

"I can't complain. I like being a dad. It ended up working out really well."

Did anyone give you good advice about fatherhood?

It's your own unique experience, and I was told that by enough people that it wasn't a shock when it was a shock.

How did you find out about the Columbia incident?

Someone sent me a link, and then the New York Times called me about it before I knew what was going on. It was weird. ... The Internet breeds suspicion, so what are you going to do?

Author Peter Miller looks at what bugs can teach humans

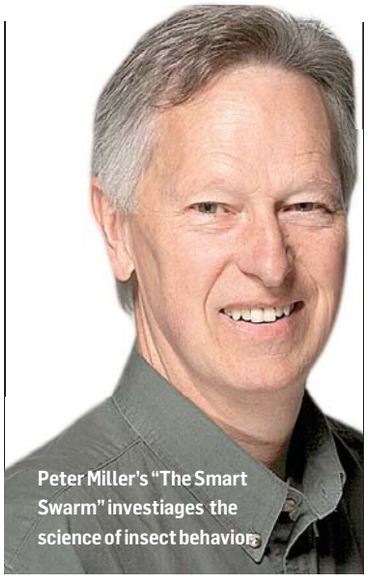
Books

Can ants actually carry away a delicious picnic basket? Thousands of them working together, maybe. And Peter Miller, author of "The Smart Swarm," thinks human society can learn a lot from an ant colony.

"When we have systems ... that are complicated and in ways are similar to how nature is complicated, we might be able to learn how nature organizes itself and how we organize ourselves," Miller said. "Some of those principles might be helpful to us as we try and make our systems a little bit more — not efficient, exactly, but to work better."

A senior editor at National Geographic, Miller first investigated professionals who were studying the behavior of flocks and schools of animals, and how it could be adapted by humans in July 2007 for a story for the magazine. He began a year and a half of research for the book, talking with econophysicists, neuralsocial scientists and mathematical biologists about how humans could mimic animals' organizational choices.

"[The field] probably got started 20 years ago, and it's really catching steam now," Miller said. "What's really fascinating is the way it crosses from one specialty into another."



Peter Miller's "The Smart Swarm" investiages the science of insect behavior.

And, hopefully, "The Smart Swarm" will help readers deal with the stress of their everyday routines, he added.

"People feel like they are caught up in these collective systems, and we don't have influence over what happens to us," Miller said. "It helps a little bit to understand that they're not alone." ROXANA HADADI

DUDLEY M. BROOKS

BELIEVE THE HYPE

Public Enemy put the politics in hip-hop. What happened?

Music

Even when Chuck D is doing something as mundane as getting an emissions test on a tour stop in Atlanta, the rapper has something to say about everybody and everything: The de facto leader of legendary rap group Public Enemy is wary of all the media hype surrounding Drake, thinks M.I.A. and Brother Ali should get more respect, and isn't shy about blaming newspaper and magazine editors for selling the masses short when it comes to covering the arts.

"It's up to your craft to reflect it all, but usually the way the media works is, they want the shortest story, they want the one that gets the most eyeballs, they want the one that sells the most," said Chuck D, born Carlton Douglas Ridenhour. "There's also a lot of activity, artistry, ingenuity, creativity going on across the board, [but] I think people and journalists are not as mature as the artists, or they're not giving them a chance."

A journalist could take offense at Chuck D's ranting, but, hey — that's Chuck D. Since the '80s, Chuck D and Public Enemy (whose current members include DJ Lord and VH1 favorite Flavor Flav), have been the torchbearers of socially conscious hip-hop, with classic albums like "It Takes a Nation of Millions to Hold Us Back" and "Fear of a Black Planet," bringing radical politics to legions of young fans and drawing critical praise for their experimentation within the genre.

The group is touring to promote the 20th anniversary of "Fear of a Black Planet," but a lot has changed in the music industry since 1990.

"Public Enemy is like the Rolling Stones of the rap game," Chuck D said. "Recording has even changed in the digital age. It's not about releasing albums; it's about making songs and saying what you feel and talking about what you see around you," said Chuck D. One new single, "Say It Like It Really Is," examines the recent controversy surrounding proposed harsh changes to Arizona's immigration laws.

Though Public Enemy hasn't released an album since 2007's "How You Sell Soul to a Soulless People Who Sold Their Soul?" the group has hardly been slacking. Instead, Chuck D has chosen to take his time with recording, refusing to put together "an album for an album's sake."

As for the current state of hip-hop, Chuck D said that all the flash translates into irrelevance — and distances artists from the real issues affecting their fans.

"There's stuff happening every second these last five years, these last three years," Chuck D said. "There's a black president, the immigration hypocrisy, the oil spill — this [stuff] is jumping off almost every month, so it's a sorry excuse when someone says, 'Well, we don't know what we can talk about, because we want to talk about something that sells.'

But even record-sales success is defined differently than it was two decades ago, he said. "If a record is selling a lot, it has a lot behind it — $10 million to sell 1 million records." And maybe there's a freedom in that.

"It's a whole different world out there, but do it just like the country artists: Really talk about what you feel and what you see," he said.

Chuck D is shepherding a new pack of underground artists on his own label, Slam Jamz, and is also a fan of the online portal HipHopGods.com, which offers old-school and under-the-radar tracks. His own new solo disc, "Tear Down This Wall," drops next year, as well as a new Public Enemy album.

After 20 years, Chuck D said it's still this spirit of community that keeps his faith in hip-hop alive. "A lot of artists took a superstar route and never gave a damn about fans, but about the game," Chuck D said. "So, we take the 'e' of the 'fame' and turn it into 'fam,' and try to trigger into that." ROXANA HADADI

DREW REYNOLDS

Chicago's Maps & Atlases create technical tunes — made even richer with added orchestration on the band's latest album.

String Theories

Maps & Atlases do the math with tight musicianship and orchestral touches

Music

At first, horns and a string section might seem like an odd addition for a math-rock indie band. But incorporating those extra elements was a necessary part of the songwriting process for Chicago band Maps & Atlases for its debut full-length disc, "Perch Patchwork." The resulting album is a dramatic departure from the sound the group cultivated on previous EPs.

"We'd talked about that in the past," said percussionist Chris Hainey. "But it was always a post-thought, where we'd record a song, and it would've seemed over-the-top to layer anything else on there. But while we were writing songs [for 'Perch Patchwork'], we made sure that there was room for them. A lot of the string and horn parts actually replace guitar lines."

While the group does have a strong rock foundation, "Perch Patchwork" also boasts an indie-pop influence. The clatter of percussion drives the love song "The Charm," which has no pronounced melody beyond singer David Davison's plaintive voice.

The sound on that song was largely shaped by the atmosphere at Steve Albini's famed Electrical Audio studio in Chicago.

"They had a bunch of marching snares in the basement, which led to the way [the song] ended up sounding," said Hainey. "It was really fun to have a bunch of crazy instruments and toys there to experiment with."

Live, though, the group performs as a scaled-down quartet, with technical proficiency filling the space that those extra instruments and musicians brought to the album. While fast-moving fretwork is expected at a Maps & Atlases show, the group's members are never ostentatious about their skill.

"We compose parts together that all make sense and complement each other," Hainey said. "We start out with a goal of making our parts interesting and also challenging to play, but we try not to make anything totally flashy or something that draws attention to itself. Nobody's ever jumped out and done a solo or slammed on a distortion pedal." CATHERINE LEWIS

Don't Be Afraid Of the Dark

Sludge-rocker Dax Riggs burrows deep in the heart of Texas

Music

A few years ago, Dax Riggs relocated from rural Louisiana to Austin, Texas, a westerly move that proved musically invigorating.

"Just being here has opened me up to new things," he said of his adopted hometown, which boasts an active scene ranging from psychedelic country to rustic metal, from hippie rock to redneck indie. "There's a lot more to take in, so there's a lot more to sift through. But I feel like I get away with a lot more inspiration," he said.

More than two decades in the industry has evolved Riggs into an eclectic musician. As a teenage dropout, he shuffled in and out of numerous punk-metal acts, the most famous and influential being '90s sludge band Acid Bath. In the last decade, he's gravitated toward a rootsier, bluesier — though no less aggressive — sound under his own name.

DANINDRAHOS

Dax Riggs has taken a hard turn toward country-metal fusion on his latest disc.

Riggs' latest album, "Say Goodnight to the World," may be his best — a darkly psychedelic exorcism that he describes as "country-proto-metal-transcendental rock 'n' roll." That label doesn't begin to cover this wide-ranging record, which includes a goth cover of Elvis Presley's "Heartbreak Hotel."

"I'm always working on cover songs, which are very inspiring for me to put through my own mental factory," Riggs said. "I feel like the lyrics of that song are much darker than when we hear them over and over."

As its title implies, "Say Goodnight" is — like all of Riggs' albums — a bleak collection of "songs about despair and bad luck." But there are glimmers of light in the corners of these otherwise pitch-dark songs, which may be the influence of Riggs' new hometown or just the wisdom that comes with age and experience.

"It may be dark, but I do believe in the magical power of human beings to make things better," he says. "There's serious darkness, but it's better to light a candle than not." STEPHEN M. DEUSNER

Trombone Shorty blows through Washington with a new brand of brass

Music

Unlike the majority of his neighbors, who were forced out of their homes after Hurricane Katrina, Troy "Trombone Shorty" Andrews left Treme by choice. But his roots will always be there.

"It's not the same Treme that I grew up with," said Andrews, who now lives a block away in New Orleans' French Quarter. "I'm the last young musician to come out of there and capture what it was before the storm. But just growing up there as a kid, for some strange reason, it was where all the musicians that I knew and that I was idolizing lived."

"It was just music all day. It was just a musical neighborhood."

Before the storm, that section of the city was a thriving musical community — perfect for the formerly diminutive prodigy Andrews, nicknamed "Trombone Shorty" because his trombone was taller than he was when he began playing, at age 4.

"It was just music all day. ... My neighbors were musicians, and my brother and my family and everybody. ... It was just a musical neighborhood," Andrews said. "I think the neighborhood was such a good family type of vibe for me that I didn't even realize some of the people weren't my real family till later on in life."

A bandleader before he even hit puberty, Andrews got his break at age 19 when he joined Lenny Kravitz's band. Now 24, Andrews and his band, Orleans Avenue, released their first nationwide album, "Backatown," in April. The record's a tight, 14-song set that eschews the unpredictable nature of Orleans Avenue's live shows for a polished studio sheen.

"One of the things we wanted to focus on was, if someone had never seen us, we wanted 'em to be able to enjoy the music, because sometimes New Orleans music has trouble translating" on record, he said.

While nodding to NOLA tradition, "Backatown" also heads into left field with some startling aggro-rock numbers and smoother pop tracks with Andrews on vocals.

"I just wanted to make some songs that can reach people that might not even know I'm a horn player," Andrews said. "As a musician, as a horn player, sometimes I even get bored listening to all instrumental music." RUDI GREENBERG (EXPRESS)

On the Magical Mystery Tour

MGMT's D.C. date pairs the band with Devendra Banhart

Music

MGMT slams electro-rock against psychedelia so effortlessly that it's not so strange for the group to share a stage with warbling troubadour Devendra Banhart.

MGMT — Ben Goldwasser and Andrew VanWyngarden — first collaborated with Banhart and elder pop statesman Beck on his Record Club project. The group reimagined selections from Leonard Cohen's '60s debut record, "Song of Leonard Cohen," including a hip-hop take on "Master Song" — a risky choice that yielded a questionable result. A bond was formed.

After that, VanWyngarden appeared in the oddball music video for Banhart's "Baby," a cut off his new record, "What Will We Be." The album, released in late 2009, is Banhart's seventh record and perhaps the least freaky example of his way-out brand of nu-folk. Whether the change can be traced to Banhart's move to major-label Warner Bros. or the unceremonious shearing of his flowing beard is arguable, but Banhart will tour with his tidied-up sound with the Grogs through October.

The boys of MGMT have been dance floor heroes since the duo exploded onto the scene with 2007's "Oracular Spectacular," which busted at the seams with such pop-psych gems as "Electric Feel" and "Time to Pretend." The band released its second major-label album, "Congratulations," earlier this year. MGMT will continue its world tour for the rest of the year with New York's Violens.

Washingtonians can hold out hope for a MGMT-Banhart jam Saturday — which would be a special treat, since the Merriweather date is the only one the acts will share this tour. So, dust off your ponchos and prepare to end the summer in a music-induced haze. SARAH ANNE HUGHES

Will Ferrell and Mark Wahlberg play wacky cops in "The Other Guys."

1 The Other Guys
"The Other Guys" takes stuff that, as a rule, isn't particularly funny, and tries to make you laugh. More often than not, this comedy about a pair of wildly mismatched cops (Mark Wahlberg, Will Ferrell) succeeds.

2 Inception
Christopher Nolan's science-fiction thriller is that rare film that can be enjoyed on superficial and progressively deeper levels, a feat that uncannily mimics the mind-bending journey its protagonist takes.

3 Step Up 3D
You already know the basic plot of "Step Up 3D": Boy meets girl. Girl breaks his heart. Everybody dances it out and, oh, yeah, competes in a high-stakes dance battle against a villainous rival crew and learns the true meaning of friendship in the process.

4 Salt
This ludicrous but somehow credible spy thriller starring Angelina Jolie delivers a swift, supercharged kick in the pants. Jolie has the chops to join the mostly all-male pantheon of action-franchise anchors.

5 Dinner for Schmucks
This comedy of humiliation, starring Paul Rudd and Steve Carell, isn't nearly as off-putting as it might have been. And the movie benefits from scene-stealing supporting players, including Zach Galifianakis.

Working Up to 'Get Low'

Aaron Schneider talks about shooting his first feature film with Robert Duvall

Director Interview

When Robert Duvall was shooting "Get Low" — a film about a man who hosts his own funeral — he asked director Aaron Schneider to put two microphones on him: a boom mic (typical for film shooting) as well as a second mic, hidden under his clothes.

The first microphone picked up the lines of dialogue between Duvall and his co-stars, which include Sissy Spacek as a widower and Bill Murray as an unscrupulous funeral director. The second microphone picked up more physical sounds made by the 79-year-old actor, playing a man on the cusp of death whose body is going before his mind and heart.

"He carries on conversations with himself in the grunts and groans and sighs," said Schneider of Duvall's subtly shaded performance.

"He created a second language with himself, and I worked very hard to preserve and maintain those subtle sounds," the director said. "It's a tremendous responsibility with that performance in your hands."

There's a fearlessness in Duvall's lived-in performance, perhaps a natural expectation for such a dynamic actor. The real revelation in "Get Low" is the care and respect with which Schneider directs his cast.

An experienced cinematographer, Schneider won an Oscar in 2003 for his short film "Two Soldiers." "Get Low" is only his first feature film, but he spins a patient, character-driven tale about deep, life-changing regret and hard-won redemption.

"I just liked the idea of a story that took a person at the end of his life and showed him trying to set things right," says Schneider. "We've all had experiences like that in our lives that changed the way we live."

For Schneider, who also edited the film, "Get Low" was a labor of love. He spent five years developing the script, researching the story and raising money before shooting even the first reel.

"The financing finally came together, and then in 24 days it was over," he recalls.

"It was a five-year wait, then suddenly you're in your living room with these living legends on your plasma set. It was a wild ride, wonderful ride." STEPHEN M. DEUSNER

Heavy Metal" (1981) brings you back to many an evening spent in your older cousin's rec room.

Rock 'n' Roll Fantasy

Like "Fritz the Cat" and "Cool World," 1981's "Heavy Metal" might be a cartoon, but it ain't for kids. Instead, this movie was made for precocious 13-year-olds: a rock-opera fantasy you could slip into the video store pile and not have Mom ask too many questions about at checkout. Sure, it has scantily-clad ladies, violence, sex and other adult themes, but the real mind-expanding power of this Ivan Reitman-produced cult classic lies in its cast and killer soundtrack. The story, such as it is, is sketched in vignettes: An astronaut in a space Corvette falls to Earth in the desert with a strange green orb that summarily melts him and identifies itself as Loc-Nar, "the sum of all evils." The Loc-Nar sort of holds the narrative together — not that anyone's too stuck on that part. John Candy, Chuck Norris and Eugene Levy lend some of the character voices, and the soundtrack — courtesy of Black Sabbath, Cheap Trick and Devo — sets the flick's too-many-special-brownies dreamy tone. ▶ *Landmark's E Street Cinema, 555 11th St. NW; Fri. & Sat. at midnight, $10; 202-452-7672, Landmarktheatres.com. Greetings From Camp Crystal Lake

Horror movies are nothing if not instructive: If you have sex, you will die. These are words to live by at Camp Crystal Lake, where Jason Voorhees and his hockey mask have been running around the woods disemboweling canoodling teens for 30 years now. Jason's mom set it all off in the first "Friday the 13th" film, avenging the drowning of her son, who died in the care of two, um, distracted camp counselors. But the end of that flick revealed a fact that conveniently left the door open to 11 successive sequels: Jason's undead. And pissed. In the decades that followed, Jason has traveled to New York and to space and has battled Freddy Krueger (naturally) — all the while continuing to scare the pants securely onto people camping outdoors everywhere. "Friday the 13th: The Final Chapter" (1984), screening this weekend, was, of course, nowhere near the final chapter in the series, so you can reassure Corey Feldman that everything will work out in the end. ▶ AFI Silver, 8633 Colesville Road, Silver Spring; Fri., 11 p.m. & Sat., 10:30 p.m., $8.50; 301-495-6720.

1 Play Like a Girl

We would talk about how adorable we find the idea of little girls in rock bands, but these tough chicks would probably just roll their eyes and run off to play some sweet guitar solos. Girls Rock! D.C. teaches girls ages 8 to 18 how to stand up and rock out, with girls forming bands and writing their own songs during the one-week day camp. 2 Keepin' It Weird

An Oklahoman by birth but a Texan for more than half a century, Ray Wylie Hubbard is a sage of the Austin music scene, a fiercely inventive musician who blends rock, country, folk, blues and whatever else happens to be lying around. He's never had a hit — unless you count writing "Up Against the Wall, Redneck Mother" for Jerry Jeff Walker in the early 1970s — but he's revered from deep in the heart of Texas all the way to Europe as a legend of Americana music. Show Your Roots

COURTESY LIGHTNING ROD RECORDS

ROCK ON: James McMurtry's website breaks his concerts down by three locations—one has him rocking across international waters, another has him stomping down the U.S.' east coast and the most date-heavy set has the Texas native comfortably at home. Needless to say, the singer's Texan roots will play a big part in his performance at the Birchmere Thursday night.

Ramadan's Sweet Relief

D.C. diners celebrate a month of sugary goodness

NEVIN MARTELL

Specializing in Middle Eastern treats like the sugar-dosed ma'amoul, above, Mediterranean Bakery & Café is the perfect place to indulge with family and friends.

Fast Breaks

Beginning on the evening of Aug. 10 and continuing through Sept. 9, Washington's Muslim community will be celebrating Ramadan. This means no eating or drinking anything between sunrise and sunset, when the fast is broken with an iftar feast.

If you're under the impression that this means there's no good Arabic food available for a month, you need to think again. Ramadan is actually the best time to indulge in Middle Eastern cuisine, because there are special dishes galore — especially if you like dessert.

Mediterranean Bakery & Café in Alexandria is the perfect place to begin your education on Ramadan's sweet rewards. It boasts a stock list of thousands of specialty foods from around the globe and innumerable delicacies from the Middle East. Executive chef Abdallah Alsawaf and his staff make dozens of baked goods on the premises, earning the shop a worth-the-trek reputation throughout the capital region.

"I know some people who drive three hours just for our pita bread," Alsawaf said in a tone that carries both pride and a little disbelief. "A lot of people move to the States thinking that they're not going to be able to get the food they love," he continued. "Then they come to our store, and we make them feel at home."

Ramadan is a time to invite family and friends over for dinner, but there's not always time to pull off the lavish feast hosts want to present. Desserts can be especially time-consuming, but Alsawaf has that covered. "Sweets are our specialty," he said. "Wherever you're from — Egypt, Syria, Lebanon — and whatever you want, we can do it."

Baklava is one of the bakery's more mainstream specialties, but adventurous sugar addicts should try the katayef, a crepe-like pastry that's folded over and filled with pistachios or walnuts. Best served right off the griddle, it's often drizzled with simple syrup or honey with orange water. Another dessert best eaten immediately is awamat. These dumplings look like donut holes or Indian gulab jamun, but they're decidedly different. Golden fried to crispy, crunchy perfection on the outside, they have a spongy inside. They're dipped in honey and orange water and served warm.

Umm ali is like bread pudding, but even more decadent. Coconut bits, walnuts, pistachios, raisins and crumbled bits of golden pastry are all jumbled together and doused in heavy cream and sugar, then baked until the top is golden brown. If this doesn't sound gluttonous enough, its then drenched in honey.

"You can never use too much honey," joked Alsawaf. Once you taste a luscious bite of umm ali, you'll be hard-pressed to disagree. NEVIN MARTELL

Supping After Sunset

Whether you're observing Ramadan or not, sumptuous spreads after sundown are always a cause for celebration. And a number of Middle Eastern restaurants in the District are ready to help you indulge in the spirit of the season:

Lebanese Taverna

With plenty of options for both carnivores and vegetarians, Lebanese Taverna is the perfect rendezvous spot when you're meeting up with large groups. If you're feeling peckish, its hummus bar allows you to choose among traditional, spicy or garlic hummus and then adds any of 10 toppings, including shrimp and falafel.

ALLISON DINNER/FTWP

Mama Ayesha's

Bring a few friends and book a booth at this AdMo stalwart. Begin with a Grande Mezze, which includes 10 of the restaurant's most popular small plates, such as baba ghanouj, tabouleh and fattoush. Its stuffed entrees — made with either lamb or vegetables — are generous, so bring your appetite or take some home. ● 1967 Calvert St. NW; 202-232-5431, Mamaayeshas.com.

Skewers

Start off with some shared appetizers such as a plate of foole, an Egyptian dish made with slow-cooked scallions, fresh tomatoes and fava beans. A biryani is the way to go for your main course. If you go on a Saturday, you'll enjoy belly dancers while you finish your meal with a cup of stronger-than-He-Man Turkish coffee. ● 1633 P St. NW; 202-387-7400, Skewers-cafeluna.com. NEVIN MARTELL

VIKRUM AIYER FOR THE EXECUTIVE OFFICE OF THE MAYOR

The $9-million transplant covers 20,000 square feet, seats 760 and touts nine private dining rooms, such as the one pictured.

A Monumental Move

New York City's Carmine's opens big in Penn Quarter

Expansions

At some point after slurping the zuppa di mussels and before tackling a 10-scoop bowl of ice cream called the Titanic, you realize the inevitable: There will be leftovers.

Doggie bags are so common at Carmine's, they should be on the menu. Everything is intended to feed at least four people, and the waitstaff warns patrons of this before taking orders.

When the family-style restaurant specializing in Southern Italian cuisine first opened in Manhattan in 1990, its schtick was to provide vast portions at reasonable prices, like a 9-inch-tall eggplant parm for $18.50. Today Carmine's also has locations in Times Square, Atlantic City, the Bahamas and — as of Aug. 3 — D.C.'s Penn Quarter.

"We're very excited to be here," said Jeffrey Bank, chief executive officer of Alicart Restaurant Group, which operates Carmine's. "I feel like we're definitely in the right spot in the right place."

VIKRUM AIYER FOR THE EXECUTIVE OFFICE OF THE MAYOR

Carmine's piles its carb-heavy dishes sky-high yet keeps prices reasonable.

And that place is big. The $9 million eatery covers 20,000 square feet divided into a main dining room of 670 seats, nine private dining rooms, a 50-seat cocktail lounge and a 40-seat wraparound bar.

The space might be new, but the menu hasn't changed in 20 years. "The classics are really the signatures," Bank said. "We give an unbelievable Caesar salad and penne alla vodka. We do a porterhouse steak Contadina — 48-ounce porterhouse served with sausage, peppers, onions — that's a fabulous dish."

Carmine's 19 pasta dishes include linguine with red or white clam sauce, rigatoni and manicotti. Chicken and veal come in the form of marsala and saltimbocca, while shrimp can be spicy fra diavolo or scampi. House specialties, such as ossobuco and rack of lamb, change daily. Entrées cost $25 on average.

Smaller plates of pasta are available at lunch for about $12 along with Carmine's Famous NY Heros, massive sandwiches such as a chicken cutlet with fried eggplant, prosciutto, mozzarella and tomato sauce, or the cold Italian combo with Genoa salami, prosciutto, mortadella, provolone cheese, roasted peppers, lettuce and tomato. They run $10.50 and include a side salad.

To wash down all those carbs, Carmine's serves its own private-label red and white wines from Italy in — what else? — magnums.

MOOD SWINGS: Drawing inspiration from a verse by Milton that refers to Liberty as a "Mountain Nymph," Studio Gallery presents the group exhibit "Tripping the Light Fantastic." Though the artists may not have kept Milton's old-fashioned spelling (he spelled it with a "K"), we're betting the artwork does his memory proud.

JORDIN ALTHAUS/SHOWTIME

The Bogus C

"The Big C" deserves a Big F for its far-fetched take on cancer.

The premise of this new Showtime series: Terminal melanoma transforms high school teacher Cathy, played by Laura Linney, from an unhappy dullard into a weird yet wonderful woman who convinces a fat student to diet, cheers up a cranky neighbor and dares to drizzle red wine on her couch.

By Marc Silver

Wow, TV cancer is the best!

She also decides not to divulge her diagnosis to her goofball spouse, spoiled son or nutty brother. And that's not so far-fetched. I recently wrote an article on non-tellers. Many have a good rationale. "People start looking at you like you are going to die," a woman told me.

But silence can cut off support. Hester Hill Schnipper, an oncology social worker in Boston who was twice diagnosed with breast cancer, is generally pro-disclosure. "I told everybody," she said. "It's cathartic, a way of starting to own it. Every time you say it aloud, it's a little more real."

Indeed, one line that rang true in the TV show was the doctor's advice to Cathy: "Tell someone." She did, sort of. In the first episode, she told her neighbor's dog.

UNIVERSAL STUDIOS

Matthew Patel, right, an airborne evil ex of Ramona Flowers', is no match for geeky rocker Michael Cera in "Scott Pilgrim vs. the World."

The 'Pilgrim's' Progress

Filmmaker Edgar Wright puts a trippy spin on a comic-book tale of young love

Film Preview

After the one-two punch of "Shaun of the Dead" and "Hot Fuzz" made him an international superstar in the world of geek cinema, it was only a matter of time until British filmmaker Edgar Wright went Hollywood.

But Wright being Wright, he's managed to "sell out" without losing an ounce of his hard-earned cult cred. His first studio feature, the Universal Pictures-backed "Scott Pilgrim vs. the World," isn't a sequel or a remake — instead, it's a highly stylized adaptation of an independently published comic book with a small but intensely passionate fan base.

"It's a film that isn't quite like anything else," says the 36-year-old director. "In Hollywood, they always encourage you to say a film is like X-meets-Y, so I always came up with some kind of [pitch] for those meetings. Things like 'It's Cameron Crowe meets "Five Deadly Venoms"' or 'It's "Ferris Bueller" meets "Kill Bill."' Actually, I always wanted to say that it's like 'Kung Fu Hustle' meets 'Phantom of the Paradise,' but if I had, people would have been, like, 'Wait, what?'"

While "Scott Pilgrim" references a few cult flicks — Wright specifically mentions De Palma's "Phantom of the Paradise," the Monkees' "Head," and Russ Meyer and Roger Ebert's camp classic "Beyond the Valley of the Dolls" — the director stresses that this particular film "is its own beast."

Based on a comic-book series by Toronto-based cartoonist Bryan Lee O'Malley, the story follows the exploits of Scott Pilgrim (Michael Cera), an aspiring rock star with a complicated love life. He's fallen for a rockin' chick, Ramona Flowers (Mary Elizabeth Winstead), but soon after they start dating, Scott learns that he's been targeted by her seven evil exes and has to defeat them each in combat if he wants to continue the relationship.

"I wanted to make a colorful film, one where you could start in a naturalistic world and then watch it become really magical and insane," Wright says. ETHAN ALTER (FILM JOURNAL INTERNATIONAL)

Soundtrack Review

A Rockin' Playlist

Maybe it's because its titular character is a bassist in a rock 'n' roll band, but the soundtrack to "Scott Pilgrim vs. the World" feels less strained than the recent spate of hipster-studded movie soundtracks. The late all-girl pop band Plumtree contributes the cheery circa-'98 track "Scott Pilgrim"; Metric delivers a fuzzy, spunky "Black Sheep." Beachwood Sparks do a slight, lovely cover of Sade's "By Your Side"; Black Lips turn in a spirited "O Katrina!" Beck composed (but does not sing) songs for Pilgrim's band, Sex Bob-Omb, which are uniformly clattery and brief, and un-Beck-like. (THE WASHINGTON POST)

A Coup for Sue: "Glee" star Jane Lynch will host NBC's "Saturday Night Live" in October — a development that was news to Lynch herself. "I notified her by accident," "Glee" creator Ryan Murphy said Tuesday in New York. "'Saturday Night Live' called to say, 'Would you give us Jane for a week in October?'" Murphy notified Lynch about her hosting gig via text message. "She literally wrote back, 'What are you talking about?'" (THE HOLLYWOOD REPORTER)

The New Pornographer

Kathryn Calder's solo debut disc packs a subtle yet deeply emotional punch

Album Review

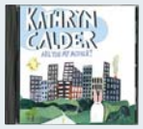
Kathryn Calder's debut disc, "Are You My Mother?" makes it very clear why Canadian indie faves New Pornographers tapped her to be a live replacement for Neko Case, then made her a permanent member. The 26-year-old possesses a flawless voice and probably couldn't hit an off-key note if she was forced to perform with a bad case of the flu.

Ironically enough, Calder's pristine vocals are the very thing that makes it difficult to immediately connect with her maiden solo effort, which dropped Tuesday. She sings so flawlessly and her voice glides over the eclectic arrangements so effortlessly that it's hard to draw much feeling from the songs.

But with repeated listenings, the songs' emotions reveal themselves. Calder and producer Colin Stewart have crafted a spacious soundscape for her tunes, mostly underpinned by her sparse piano or acoustic guitar.

CALEB BEYERS

Kathryn Calder's masterful vocals glide over her sparse, eclectic arrangements.



Are You My Mother?
Kathryn Calder

The bittersweet tenor of "Arrow" — the album's circular, sing-songy fourth track, which was given away as an MP3 download on Calder's website back in June — is indicative of much of the album, which is said to have been inspired by Calder's caring for her terminally ill mother over the course of two years. The tunes strike a balance between the desperate and the hopeful, recalling other artists who trade in lyrical intricacy, such as Paul Simon.

Monster Reads

Vampires, aliens and zombies are having their day in the sun — er, moonlight. A handful of new novels bring non-humans to life in surprisingly silly, melodramatic and inventive ways.

'GO, MUTANTS!' ($24, ECCO)

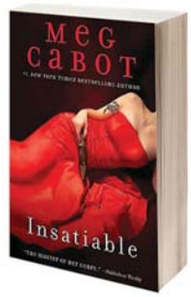
Historical Uncertainty

In Larry Doyle's new novel, aliens arrive at the Polo Grounds on Oct. 3, 1951, during the National League playoff, wreaking havoc with humanity. Twenty years later, Marilyn Monroe is a presidential hopeful. Nine-tenths of the population remains human. Everyone else, including 17-year-old J!m, the novel's antihero, can trace his/her/its ancestry to an off-planet sire or siren. A Reg-ulean without a cause, J!m is James Dean channeled by the cast of "Mystery Science Theater 3000."

'THE LOVING DEAD' ($15, NIGHT SHADE)

Reawakened Passion

Bay Area underachievers undergo a zombie makeover in Amelia Beamer's first novel, starting with bi-curious Kate, who gets more than she bargained for when she hooks up with her belly dancing instructor, Jamie. "I think our generation is possibly a little too concerned about zombies," Kate remarks shortly before Jamie's tongue turns "the color of well-done burger." This might ordinarily be a turnoff, but the zombie retrovirus is both sexually transmitted and sexually arousing.



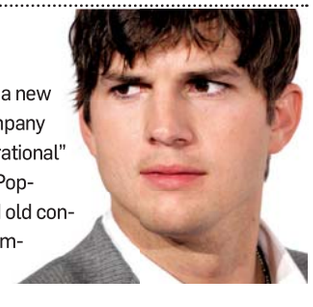
'INSATIABLE' ($23, MORROW)

New Vein of Mystery

In Meg Cabot's new novel, Meena Harper is a writer for the eponymous long-running soap opera "Insatiable." She's stuck with a ratings war and a directive from her boss to create a vampire plotline to heat things up. Life imitates the Dark Arts when Meena's neighbors invite her to a party. There she meets a Romanian prince with an impeccable bloodline; he's investigating a series of killings that threatens the truce between the undead and mortals. ELIZABETH HAND (THE WASHINGTON POST)

TV Beat

Young Show, Old Idea



The formerly rerun-happy TV Land is adding a new show by Ashton Kutcher's production company to its lineup. "Forever Young" will be a "generational" version of Kutcher's "Beauty and the Geek," Popwatch.ew.com reported. Teams of young and old contestants must get to know each other and compete against other young/old duos. (EXPRESS)

Horoscope

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) Success should be as easy as one-two-three: one, get started; two, keep going; three, cross the finish line. Can it be so?

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) Your instructions will enable others to work in tandem with one another in a manner that exceeds expectations. You'll win praise.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) You're after the support of one who can really give a project of yours a big name, but you have a few hoops to jump through first.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) Now is not the time to make demands of others; rather, make your desires known in a way that encourages cooperation and good feelings.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) You may be thinking it's the last time, but this may not be the case. You may want to keep going if the money is right.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) Take care that you don't find yourself playing the sucker and letting another get away with the loot. Keep your wits about you at all times.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) You may not know just how you are affecting others, especially if you are in one of your more aggressive moods. Lighten it up a bit.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) You'll want to lay down the law early in the day, making your expectations clear and inspiring others to toe the line.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) Your dealings with those younger than you will say a great deal about you — and you can bet that someone in charge is watching.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) You may not know it until time has expired, but you're likely to be taking a test of sorts — and the results will shape the days to come.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) You must make sure that the right hand knows what the left is doing; it's absolutely essential that you're entirely in sync.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) You can do more in less time than anyone expects, but your confidence is high and you can tap into new stores of energy.

Seeking parents of children with ADHD and children with ADHD to participate in a research study to evaluate a survey on ADHD treatment

Are you the parent of a child between 6-17 years of age? Has your child been medically diagnosed with ADHD? You and your child may be eligible to participate in a research study to learn about preferences regarding ADHD medication.

If your child is between the ages of 10-17, participation would involve you and your child coming in at the same time to be interviewed. You and your child will each complete a survey and then answer questions about it. If your child is between the ages of 6-9, participation would involve you coming in for an interview without your child. You will complete a survey and then answer questions about it.

All interviews will last approximately 1 hour. All participants will be nominally compensated for their time.

If you and/or your child are interested in participating, please call Alexis or Tina at 240-482-0034.

LIFELONG DREAMS

Surprisingly, Kanye Is Nowhere to Be Found

Bowling fans have picked country star Taylor Swift as their 2010 choice for celebrity induction into the International Bowling Museum and Hall of Fame. Swift barely beat pop star Justin Bieber to secure her lane in bowling history. They were among nine celebrities nominated for their public support of the sport. Swift has been photographed bowling with friends. (AP)

JEMAL COUNTESS/GETTY

Blake Lively plans to go into Greta Garbo-style seclusion immediately.

PREMEDITATED KILLINGS

Star Also Has 'Exit Plan' For Obnoxious Neighbor

Blake Lively, star of the CW's "Gossip Girl," has reportedly asked producers to kill off her character, Serena, because she is tired of behind-the-scenes fighting on set. An anonymous source that spoke to Heat magazine said Lively has pitched to the producers several possible exits for Serena. (EXPRESS)

THAT'S SCIENCE

George Hates Gaga, Logic

After Lady Gaga admitted to cocaine use in a Vanity Fair interview, Boy George has lashed out at her via a blog on Papermag.com. "As a recovering addict who knows how dangerous 'occasional' use is," he wrote, "I can think of no reason for Gaga to reveal this to her young audience." He went on to wonder, "Isn't saying your [sic] an 'occasional' drug taker a bit like saying you're bisexual? That usually means you're raving!" We wonder if all that eyeliner can possibly be good for the limbic system. (EXPRESS)

NARCISSISM

Next: Snooki Unwittingly Becomes Tea Party Icon

Nicole "Snooki" Polizzi says that President Obama's assertion on "The View" that he "[doesn't] know who Snooki is," is clearly false. He mentioned her name, along with other cast members of "Jersey Shore," in a joke about a tanning tax at the White House Correspondents' Association Dinner in May. "I know he knows who I am," she said. "Why did he have to lie and say he didn't know me?" (EXPRESS)

"I'm glad that Levi has not given up on completing his education and is looking for steady employment."

— BRISTOL PALIN, ON THE NEWS THAT HER BABY DADDY PLANS ON RUNNING FOR MAYOR.

Unironic

Mag Confuses Ignorance, Apathy

Alanis Morissette has revealed her pregnancy by way of an Us Weekly magazine list of "25 Things You Don't Know About Me." Other facts on the list include that she loves red wine, has three pet turtles and "collects essential oils from around the world." She is married to rapper Mario Treadway, also known as Souleye. (EXPRESS)
